LAW ENFORCEMENT Newsletter

A Message from BILL CERVONE STATE ATTORNEY

Heading into the last part of the year things remain every bit as uncertain in the criminal justice system as they have been since March when the Coronavirus pandemic hit. As I write this in mid-August, the courts remain largely shut down although at least incustody cases are being moved somewhat. Still, trials remain a moving target and there is no clear answer as to when or how they may resume.

Efforts are being made experiment courtroom processes, especially in the regional counties, in early September, but there is guarantee that Covid numbers will allow that to succeed. For the moment as much testimony, deposition and pre-trial motion practice as possible remains on a remote basis. Everyone's patience and flexibility as we work through exactly how that gets done is greatly appreciated.

Of more long term consequence the ramifications of the events leading to current "de-fund the police" and other reform movements will no doubt be playing out for years to come. All of us who are committed to good law enforcement need to know that while we can always improve what we do and how we do it the more radical proposals that make the rounds are not likely to take hold. Be engaged in the process and be realistic in understanding how our communities expect us to interact with them. It goes without saying that when it convenes next Spring the Florida legislature will again deal with a multitude of reforms, some reasonable and some not. It is up to us to respond appropriately and work to make sure that the overwhelming good work done by our law enforcement agencies to protect our com-

3rd DCA Reverses Course As To Joint Possession And Probable Cause

The May 2020 issue of the Legal Bulletin contained a lengthy review of a then new 3rd DCA case, J.J. v State. That case involved a finding as to the requirements for probable cause in a joint possession case, and the opinion amounted to significant restrictions on law enforcement. In July, however, the 3rd DCA sitting en banc, meaning the entire court membership and not just the original panel of three judges who initially decided the case, reviewed the case and reversed that ruling.

To refresh everyone, J.J., a juvenile, was one of three people in a kitchen when officers made a warrantless entry in pursuit of another person. The officers saw a fork, a scale, and a glass beaker on the stove in the kitchen, each with a white substance suspected to be crack cocaine on it. There were two other adults in the kitchen but the juvenile as the closest to the stove. He was sitting in a chair, not facing the stove, not touching the stove, and looking at his cellphone which he was holding in both hands when the officers entered. He was neither asked nor said anything but he was arrested due to his proximity to the suspected cocaine and paraphernalia. There was no evidence that he lived in the residence or regarding his status as an owner, a renter, a visitor, or whether he was with one of the adults who were there. In addition to the other two adults in the kitchen, several other adults were in other rooms in the residence.

The issue in the case was whether probable cause existed to arrest the juvenile. The original panel opinion said no, there was not, saying that while these facts and the juvenile's proximity to the illegal articles may have created a founded suspicion to question the juvenile they fell short of probable cause.

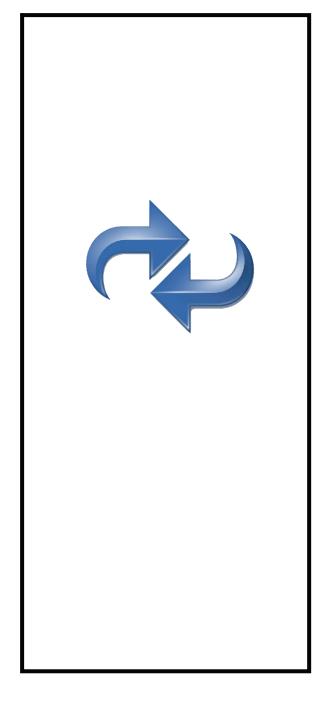

In reversing that ruling, the en banc opinion began by noting that proximity alone is not enough to establish constructive possession of contraband. As we know, going beyond mere presence, or proximity, is always the challenge in constructive and joint possession situations. The en banc opinion, however, went on to say that probable cause of joint, constructive possession can be based on the totality of the circumstances including proximity in a setting where a drug dealer would be unlikely to admit an innocent person with the potential to furnish evidence against him. Probable cause, the en banc opinion goes on to say, requires only a probability or "substantial chance" of criminal activity, not an actual showing of such activity, and "is not a high bar." Probable cause "does not demand any showing that such a belief be correct or more likely true than false."

Applying that standard to the facts, the full DCA relied on the juvenile having been seated next to a stove opening being used to cook crack cocaine in a small kitchen of a private dwelling when and where only an accomplice would normally be admitted. While those facts, they concluded, may not establish constructive possession beyond a reasonable doubt, or even that possession was more likely than not, they clearly support a "substantial chance" of possession, which is all the 4th Amendment requires for probable cause.

The moral of the story remains largely the same as it was with the original opinion in the case: detail detail! All of the arguably small or even inconsequential details of the case are what the revised, corrected opinion used to conclude that under the totality of the circumstances there was probable cause. As a bonus, the en banc opinion addressed the claimed deficiencies the original panel relied on. That the juvenile said nothing, for example, means nothing because the 4th Amendment does not require that and there is no authority to require that he even be asked anything. The essential nature of probable cause is that it is "a practical nontechnical conception that deals with the factual and practical considerations of everyday life on which reasonable and prudent men, not legal technicians, act."

Retired University Police Department Lieutenant Colonel Martha Varnes passed away on July 17th after struggling with Alzheimer's. She was 85. Martha joined UPD in a clerical position in 1958, returned to school in the late 60s and became a patrol officer in 1974 as the agency's first female officer, and worked her way through the ranks in the following years. She was a pioneer for women in law enforcement and for victim's advocacy, especially for those who had suffered sexual or relationship violence. A mentor to many and a friend to all, she embodied community policing at the University of Florida and in the broader community before that term became fashionable.

*Note from Monica:

I have attempted to identify legislation that had some relation to crimes or penalties; but, unlike in the past, I was unable to read and review all the legislation in this outline. The summaries sometimes differ from the final bill that is approved by the Governor. There are about 7 bills where we may be waiting on the Governor or a Session Law number. It is noted at the end of the summary.

Special thanks to LobbyTools and House and Senate staff for their analysis and summaries.
